Each is designed to prepare for the production of films and video games, or to create opportunities for young people to have different experiences. The workshops are sponsored by VivoD, the world's leading video and web training provider, and TEDX. Seminars are held twice a year. Their judge is TEDTalks. The workshops aim to ensure that participants develop the skills they need to become video game and film developers, such as how to create games and films. The master class, which took place in September 2010, was devoted to the creation of the game and the study of visual effects. It was held in the city center, in hall D with a beautiful view of the street. The workshop provided the participants with the opportunity to learn about training according to the needs and preferences of the participants. Topics for game and film developers that were of interest to participants were covered, including lighting, sound, technology and their functions. Other workshop topics included animation and rendering, encoding and recording video files, and creating projects using animation and video editing technologies. These themes focused on various aspects of game and movie making. The participants were enthusiastic about the workshop and hopefully will host more such events in the future.
