Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of electrophoretic displays (EPD). More specifically, this invention relates to an apparatus and method for providing solvent-free EPD displays, as well as other fluids that may be desired in the EPD. 2. Description of the Related Art (Note: This application references a number of different publications as indicated throughout the specification by reference numbers enclosed in brackets, e.g., [x]. A list of these different publications ordered according to these reference numbers can be found below in the section entitled “References.” Each of these publications is incorporated by reference herein.) An electrophoretic display (EPD) generally comprises a suspension of one or two charged pigment particles in a fluid (i.e., a dielectric solvent that is substantially polar and resistant to oxidation). The suspension contained within a front or viewing area of a display is divided into two separate and distinct areas: (i) a suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially non-polar and is used to provide an electric field across a viewing area of an EPD) and (ii) a suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially polar and is used to provide an electric field across a viewing area of an EPD). The suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially non-polar and is used to provide an electric field across a viewing area of an EPD) is typically placed on top of a substantially non-polar substrate, while the suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially polar and is used to provide an electric field across a viewing area of an EPD) is placed on top of a substantially polar substrate, thereby creating a first fluid-filled area and a second fluid-filled area within the display. The fluid-filled areas are separated by a dielectric barrier (i.e., a fluid-filled area defined between the substantially non-polar substrate and a substantially polar substrate), which prevents mixing of the suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially non-polar and is used to provide an electric field across a viewing area of an EPD) and the suspending fluid (i.e., a fluid that is substantially polar and e79caf774b
