Pregnancy in a left-to-right shunt heart: a case report. We present a case report of a 21-year-old woman, who conceived for the first time at the age of 18. She was diagnosed with pulmonary atresia, ventricular septal defect, and aortic coarctation, complicated with left-to-right shunt, but there were no other associated abnormalities. She underwent a successful closure of the ventricular septal defect and complete atrioventricular septal defect under hypothermic circulatory arrest. Because this patient has a left-to-right shunt and infundibular septum formation in the foetal stage, it was assumed that the foetus developed without damage in spite of the hypoxia state. After delivery, the patient was referred to our department for the surgical correction of mitral regurgitation, left ventricular aneurysm and fenestrated ventricular septal defect. She underwent total removal of the leaflet of the left ventricular aneurysm with a card
