- "Track C is a next generation iOS game simulator that aims to bring the classical story of the "Neo Tokyo" to a more dynamic and interactive platform. In a basic urban life where buildings and interiors look like real, the player creates his/her own career with goals, challenges and sidequests. The player has their own apartment which can be completed with furniture, and a fully functional job-center where the player can get different jobs that will attract the attention of potential employers. - Track C will offer a seemingly endless in-depth progression, with an ultimate objective to be reached. In every level and every town, the player will have to make choices that can affect his/her "game" in a permanent way, his/her relationships and his/her path to reach the ultimate goal, which will not be easy. - Track C has been designed as a rich and detailed fantasy world, which also offers an immersive and exciting gaming experience." - This Game is for a Very old and generally experienced player, with familiarity with point-and-click, visual novels and RPGs, in other words, a walk in the park. - Genre: RPG, City Simulation - Game Environment: - Town: - City: - College: - Castle: -

Other basic concepts, such as the basic stat progression, the enemies whose destruction that must be overcome, and the power levels will come later. Once we have a solid vision of the game, we will begin to plan and develop, making the balance between the different aspects, and that in the start we will be sure that our game will be the one that the player wants to play. and Syrian Army Re-Encounter in Palmyra Syrian regime strongholds in the capital of the central Homs governate Palmyra have come under serious sporadic attacks from rebels after remaining quiet for months. These attacks started in the early hours of April 2, and resumed after heavy fighting in the city of Homs. In the following days, the Syrian armed forces have managed to hold ground in the suburbs of Palmyra, launching sporadic counterattacks in the area. Two days after the last fighting, state media has stopped reporting on military operations in Palmyra, raising fears that the buffer zone has collapsed. Since the beginning of the armed conflict in Syria the Assad regime has never left its strongholds in the capital of Homs governate. However, for the first time since March 28th, the Syrian conflict has returned to Palmyra as the area's inhabitants are living in fear of attacks. The city of Palmyra sits on an important geological plateau in the middle of Homs governorate. The plateau rises to a height of 4.6 kilometers above sea level and has strategic significance in terms of military operations because of its location, surrounded by mountains on three sides. It is the isthmus connecting the capital of Homs governate with the Syrian capital Damascus. Because of the location, it is a natural place for border guard bases and checkpoints. The capital of Homs governate is located in a valley. Its location has allowed the city to survive even after the fall of Aleppo, once the most populous city in Syria.
