The invention relates generally to prosthetic devices and more particularly to a prosthetic device that can be secured to a first prosthetic device and mated to a second prosthetic device with sufficient strength to allow for movement between the two. People affected by amputation or mutilation of a limb often employ prosthetic devices for mobility and rehabilitation purposes. In the case of lower limb amputation, prosthetic devices typically replace the residuum of the hip or knee joint. The prosthetic device for the hip is generally referred to as a hip endoprosthesis, and the prosthetic device for the knee is generally referred to as a knee endoprosthesis. Typically, the prosthetic devices that are used for mobility and rehabilitation are the same type of endoprosthesis device as the residuum of the amputated limb. In other words, the conventional prosthetic devices that are available for mobility and rehabilitation purposes are typically either a hip endoprosthesis device or a knee endoprosthesis device. The choice of a hip endoprosthesis device or a knee endoprosthesis device for mobility and rehabilitation purposes is usually determined by the residuum of the amputated limb. For example, in the case of an amputation of the lower limb, the residuum is a hip and a conventional endoprosthesis device that is based on that type of residuum is a hip endoprosthesis device. In addition, conventional prost
