Download Pokémon X - Y at Subscribe to the Nintendo of Europe YouTube channel: Convert an input to a char in C So I am creating a basic calculator. I want to take an input from the user using scanf() which is stored in an integer input. However, the input needs to be converted into a char. I tried using atoi() which was pretty close to what I needed. I input 15 and I would expect the result to be c. However the actual result was c. Is there any way to do this without having to convert into a string? A: Scanf takes a char*, and a format string that specifies how to read the data. It also takes additional arguments which are converted from their arguments into wide characters. So you have to use %c and convert 15 to a c-style string. So: int main(void) { int number = 15; char string; string = malloc(11); if (string == NULL) die(); if (scanf("%c", string)!= 1) die(); printf("%s ", string); return 0; } Note: malloc is never required - but an error return from malloc means you didn't allocate enough. A: I tried using atoi() which was pretty close to what I needed. I input 15 and I would expect the result to be c. You don't need to use atoi at all. Atoi takes a char buffer, and returns the value it finds at that point, which is a wide char. In other words, there's no char sequence there at all. You can use scanf to get user input, and then convert it 6d1f23a050
