The most widely used adjuvants for immunosuppression in animals are the aluminium hydroxide-based adjuvants, but they have a number of drawbacks which include the requirement for repeated doses and the rapid clearance of the adjuvant from circulation. Immunomodulatory peptides represent a possible alternative adjuvant approach. They are rapidly broken down into shorter biologically active peptides, and may act to stimulate the natural pattern of antigen presentation. Although a wide variety of adjuvant/antigen combinations have been investigated and are now widely in use, none of the peptide adjuvant systems tested to date has proved to be a true replacement for aluminium hydroxide in terms of effectiveness and safety. This review focuses on the peptide adjuvants which have been investigated to date in veterinary immunosuppression, and reviews progress in the understanding of the most effective and safe combination of antigen and peptide adjuvant.Q: How to get the index of an item inside a Listbox I'm quite new to silverlight and I'm having a problem atm I have a listbox that has items from a ObservableCollection and I want the index of the item in the listbox that the user has selected. So far I have tried the following:- private void listBox1_SelectionChanged(object sender, SelectionChangedEventArgs e) { int index = listBox1.SelectedIndex; MessageBox.Show(index.ToString()); } But this only returns: object reference not set to an instance of an object and I get a null ref exception when I try to do something later on in my code So how do I get the index of an item inside the ListBox? A: Try this private void listBox1_SelectionChanged(object sender, SelectionChangedEventArgs e) { int index = listBox1.SelectedIndex; MessageBox.Show(Convert.ToString(6d1f23a050
